Plan and Prepare Your Experience

A guide to sharing your idea with Can-Dine

CAN-DINE
EXPERIENCE COTTAGE COUNTRY

www.can-dine.com

Your idea starts a conversation

You already have skills, talents and interests worth sharing. Can-Dine can help you turn them into an experience guests will enjoy, with guidance and practical support to get started.

Tell us about your experience in your own words. What you share helps us create your webpage, website banner and other promotional materials so guests can discover what you offer.

Your proposal starts a conversation. It doesn't need to be polished, complete or follow a particular format. These sections offer a few prompts to help you share your idea and identify where support would be useful.

Any worksheets are optional, for your own use, and do not need to be submitted. Your proposal is treated in confidence as we work with you to develop the experience and prepare information for guests.

PART 1

What would you enjoy sharing?

Tell us what it is you know, enjoy and feel comfortable sharing with others. It could be a hobby, a skill, a favourite recipe or knowledge of a local interest.

What would guests do with you, and what do you enjoy about it? Your knowledge, enthusiasm and personal approach help us show guests what makes your experience worth joining.

PART 2

Who would enjoy taking part?

Your experience may appeal to curious beginners, people with a shared interest, families or visitors looking for something different.

Share who you think would enjoy it and anything useful about participation, such as previous experience, age, abilities or accessibility. This helps guests recognize whether the activity suits them.

You don't need to anticipate every question. We can explore the details together.

PART 3

Where and how?

Hosting at home or on your property is at the heart of Can-Dine. A kitchen, garden, workshop or another suitable space can give guests a personal experience while helping keep costs down. Your home doesn’t need to be elaborate; its character and your welcome are part of the appeal.

Local businesses and community venues are welcome too. Can-Dine can help you connect with suitable places in your area and develop a pitch that shows how hosting your experience could benefit both you and the venue.

Tell us what you have in mind for the setting, group size and approximate duration. Details about what you provide, what guests should bring and anything they can take home help us describe the experience clearly. If some arrangements are still undecided, we can help you work through them.

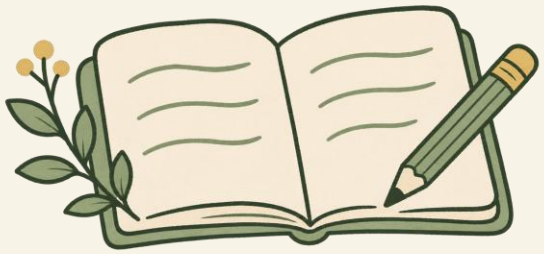

PART 4

Welcoming and safety

Much of welcoming guests will feel familiar: a clean, comfortable space, a friendly introduction and guidance when someone needs it.

Share anything guests should know about your activity or setting before attending. This might include suitable clothing, access to the activity area or the level of physical participation involved. Clear information helps people arrive prepared and feel comfortable.

If your idea involves significant risk or requires guests to have specialist training, discuss it with us early. Hosts remain responsible for safe delivery. Can-Dine can help you think through preparations and identify activity-specific permissions or insurance questions that need checking.

Pets, privacy and photos

Pets and privacy

Pets can be part of a home experience. Let us know about animals so guests can consider allergies or fears before booking. You can also identify which areas of your home or property remain private.

Photos and social media

Photos and videos help guests share their enjoyment and help others discover your experience. Hosts should be comfortable with activity images being shared online, including agreed surroundings visible in the background.

Photo boundaries should be explained in advance. Guests and hosts should respect private spaces and ask before photographing or sharing identifiable images of others.

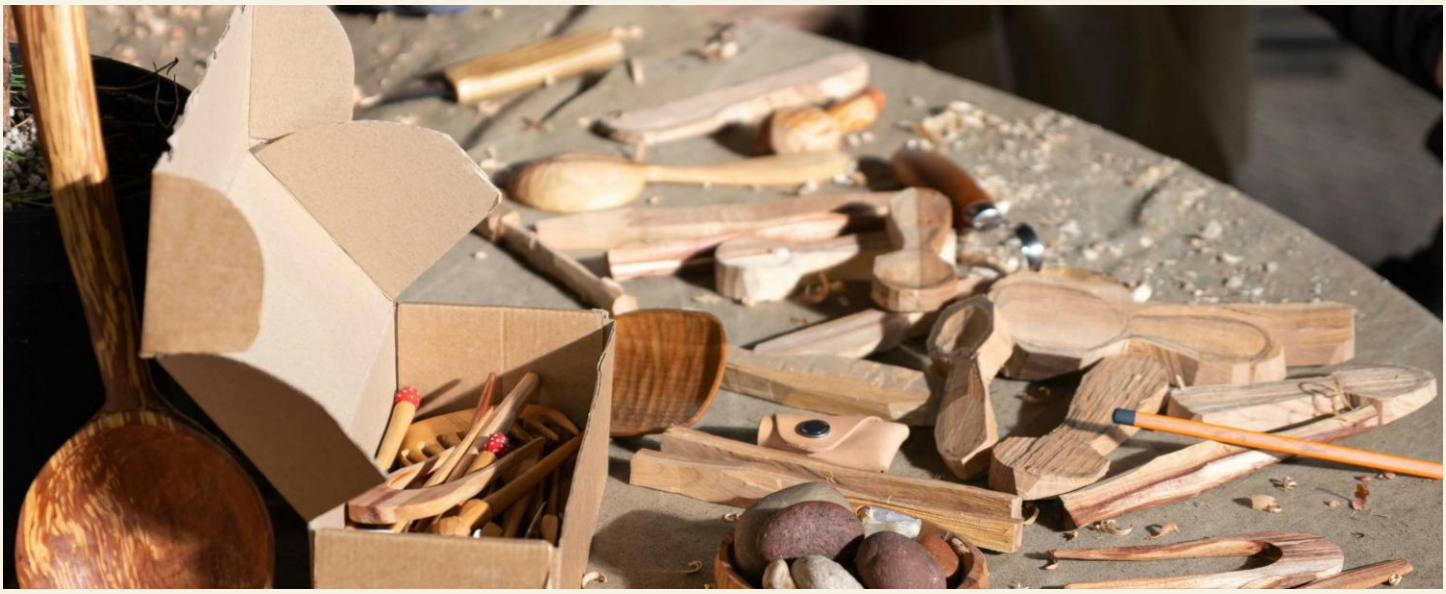

PART 5

What would make it worthwhile for you?

For you

Hosting can offer income, new connections and the enjoyment of sharing something you care about. It can also introduce people to local businesses, places and communities.

Tell us what you hope to gain from hosting and how often you would like to offer your experience. You choose your price. Can-Dine can suggest pricing approaches and help you explore costs and potential earnings at different group sizes.

PART 5 · CONTINUED

What would make it worthwhile for your guests?

For your guests

What might make someone glad they joined you? They could learn a skill, make something to take home, meet people or discover a new interest. Your experience might become their first step into a hobby or local community.

These details help us communicate the appeal of your experience and explain what the price includes.

Everything needed for the advertised activity should be included in its price. Related kits, equipment or merchandise can be offered separately as optional, pressure-free purchases. Interested in offering T-shirts, hats or other items connected to your experience? Talk to Can-Dine about options for selling through our website.

PART 6

What would you like help with next?

Bring whatever you have so far. A conversation, a few notes or some photos can help us understand your experience and begin preparing its presentation.

Can-Dine can help shape your activity, explore pricing, connect you with local venues and businesses, create your webpage and website banner, and promote your experience.

If details are missing, we can ask questions and work through them with you. Your proposal gives us a starting point for showing guests what you offer and helping you make it happen.